Question 15Marks:

Read the comments of Eleanor Roosevelt, Chair of the UN commission that drafted the UDHR, on the importance of universal human rights standards:

Where, after all, do universal rights begin? In small places, close to home – so close and so small that they cannot be seen on any maps of the world. Yet they are the world of the individual person; the neighborhood he lives in; the school or college he attends; the factory, farm or office where he works. Such are the places where every man, woman, and child seeks equal justice, equal opportunity, equal dignity without discrimination. Unless these rights have meaning there, they have little meaning anywhere. Without concerned citizen action to uphold them close to home, we shall look in vain for progress in the larger world.

Eleanor Roosevelt
The Great Question, 1958

A) What do you think Eleanor Roosevelt means by "universal rights"?

B) What does it mean the statement "without concerned citizen action to uphold them close to home, we shall look in vain for progress in the larger world"?

Question 16Marks:

Read the opinion article written by Brielle Edwards for the blog "Life examinations" and answer the questions:

MLK vs. Malcolm X (similarities/differences)

MARCH 14, 2011
by Brielle Edwards

Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X are very prominent African American individuals throughout history. They fought for what they stood for but in many different ways. As we all know in history there are no two great men that are alike. Their many beliefs may have blossomed from the households they came from and how they grew up. King grew up in a middle class family and was well educated. While, Malcolm X grew up in an underprivileged environment that was very hostile with barely any schooling. Martin Luther King Jr. was always against violence, throughout his entire ministry. He always stood his ground, and he stood out because even though he may have been physically attacked, he never reacted with violence. Martin Luther King Jr. followed the Christian faith. Malcolm X was a Muslim, and believed in Muslim principles. His most famous line was "By any Means Necessary". He believed in fighting back physically. Whatever had to be done to get freedom he was all for it whether it be violence or nonviolence. Although later in life he visited Jerusalem, and met other Muslims. He changed his views, and became nonviolent.

One of the most famous civil rights acts was the March on Washington, which portrays the different perspectives of Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X. The March on Washington took place on August 28, 1963. Over 20,000 people came to march from Washington to the Lincoln memorial in Washington D.C. This march happened to be one of Martin Luther King Jr.'s greatest accomplishments throughout his life. This event is where he took the crown for the face of the civil rights movement. Even in a time of violence, King would never act out. King wanted all the races to come together for the hatred and violence to be put to a halt. Malcolm X had a different perspective regarding the march. He felt that integration would destroy the black and the white man. He felt that American blacks should be more concerned with helping each other. He felt blacks should start by giving the same race self-respect first. He did not agree with what King had to say, he felt that King's dream was not a dream but a nightmare.

MLK's approach to civil rights/equality was non-violent protesting, speaking out for non-violence, passive resistance, and what he called, "weapons of love". However, Malcolm X's approach to civil rights/equality was extremely different. He was suspicious of whites, willing to use "by any means necessary" to achieve equality. He was a segregationist until he went to Mecca. The commonality that they both share is that they both wanted equal rights for African Americans they just went down different paths to receive those rights.

In my opinion I feel that MLK was a better more prominent advocate for the Civil Rights Movement. I feel this way because he was a peaceful leader, he was always for a non-violence approach with handling things, and he wanted everyone, all races to come together and form equality. If society followed through with Malcolm X's approach for segregation and for races to be separated the world would honestly be a hell hole. Because of MLK's peaceful approach he is well respected all over the world by many races and on top of that he has his own holiday. If it weren't for him, I would not be where I am at now.

A) In the author's opinion, which one of the characters is the best one? Transcribe a passage that proves this point.

B) According to the author, what is Martin Luther King's approach to deal with the Civil Rights Movement?

C) In the last paragraph you find the author's impression about the impact of MLK's peaceful approach in his life: "If it weren't for him, I would not be where I am at now." What might it mean? Write your conclusions.

Question 17

Marks:

In the previous question, you read an article found in a blog. Now read a comment on the same post to answer the questions:

Stephan Sakhai PERMALINK

March 14, 2011 5:14 PM

You finish your post backing the peaceful ways of MLK and putting down the violent ones of Malcolm X. You say you wouldn't be where you are now if it weren't for MLK, and you seem to not give any credit at all to Mr. X.

I wonder, however, if you are overlooking the fact that you don't know what would have happened if Malcolm X didn't use violent means and it was only MLK's peaceful motives that fought for civil rights in America. Although MLK's methods might have been more important and influential, I feel you cannot overlook what Malcolm X did, both by rallying blacks and instilling fear in whites.

I also wonder who other philosophers would side with, the violent efforts of Malcolm X or the peaceful ones of MLK. Locke, for example, might promote standing up to protect your property, and would therefore side with Mr. X and his "by any means necessary" approach.

I would therefore argue that although MLK was very important, and yes probably the most important man when it comes to civil rights and equality, I don't think anyone can take away credit to others, including Malcolm X, for their efforts and help they had in providing equality to all people in America.
